QUALITY COACHES REQUIRED FOR CASH

"When Nigel Skill of Nottingham was asked about his new coach interior he was grinning from ear to ear!"

...It wasn't just the colour co-ordinating with his coach livery or the fact that matching moquette was used for the body side panels, the ceiling, the seat backs and the lower side luggage racks. It wasn't even because he knew it was the hard wearing , high quality he had come to expect from Plaxton, ...no!, it was far more important than that. Because Nigel Skill of Nottingham had chosen his new coach Moquette without consulting his wife , Mrs Skill, ... but she liked it, and that made him very happy!.

Hyndburn seeks a buyer

Hyndburn Transport Ltd is seeking a buyer following a decision by its owner, Hyndburn Borough Council, to sell its municipal bus company. The Council's Policy and Resources Committee made the decision in response to a report commissioned from KPMG which concluded the company, as an experienced local operator, enjoyed considerable local loyalty and the support of a committed workforce. As a small company, however, they were experiencing difficulties in buying the new buses which would make their services attractive in an increasingly competitive market.

George Slynn, the Council leader, said: 'We are clearly reluctant to sever our links with what used to be a municipal transport service. We will be looking for a buyer who shows commitment to maintaining bus services in the areas where they are needed, working with the existing workforce and maintaining open competition for bus services in the Hyndburn area.' The Committee has charged Mike Chambers, its chief executive, to seek offers from companies that have demonstrated a capacity to provide reliable, high quality transport services. The services of KPMG are also to be retained by the Council to assist in the identification of prospective purchasers and in negotiating the terms of any disposal.

FirstBus EGM approves SBH acquisition

An extraordinary general meeting of FirstBus plc has passed a special resolution to: approve the acquisition of SB Holdings Ltd; to increase the authorised share capital of the company; to authorise and empower the directors of the company to allot equity securities; to dis-apply pre-emption rights in respect of a proportion of the company's share capital; and to increase the borrowing limits of the company to £400,000,000.

Southampton Citybus buy Hants & Sussex

Southampton Citybus has acquired the Southern Bus & Coach Company, trading as Hants & Sussex Motor Services, which had gone into administrative receivership in mid-May. Citybus has acquired all the tendered and contract routes operated by Hants & Sussex, five of its vehicles and the majority of the staff. The property was excluded from the sale.

Archie Parsons, operations director of Citybus, said: 'As an employee owned company we felt this acquisition would be an ideal way to expand into new territory. We have made good progress in Southampton since the buyout and this offered us our first real chance of growth. Our first move will be to stabilise the operation and assess its potential. We already have parking space in the area and will shortly look for a more permanent office site. I am pleased that most of the staff agreed to join us, particularly Ros Frazer who will continue to manage the operation in that area.'

More Setra S215HDs for China

The Setra Bus & Coach division of EvoBus has concluded an order for a further 120 Setra S215HD coaches with Mercedes Benz engines. The vehicles will be delivered as ckd kits and will be assembled by the Hefei Automobile Works bus and coach plant in the province of Anhui in south east China. The kits will arrive in China between November 1996 and November 1997.

Setra ceased production of the S215HD at its Ulm plant in September 1991 though it continued in Spain for several years afterwards. By the end of this year there will be 100 Setra coaches operating in China. Setra claim that Chinese passengers appreciate the comfort offered by the S215HD so much that they are willing to pay operators a premium for a ticket and wait a day or two for a seat.

Parks buy Trathens

Parks of Hamilton Holdings Ltd has acquired Plymouth based Trathens Transport Services. Mike Trathen is to stay on as managing director of the operation which has a fleet of 42 vehicles, 28 of which run National Express diagrams. The remainder operate private hire or are allocated to the company's Star Rider services. Mike Trathen commented, 'There has simply been a change of ownership and nothing else will change. There are no planned cuts in services or the likelihood of job losses.' The acquisition boosts the Parks operation by just under 50%. Parks also have interests in express services, tours and private hires.

Lucas-Varity Merger

Lucas Industries is to merge with the US based Varity Corporation to form a new UK holding company called LucasVarity plc. Both companies manufacture and supply component parts for the automotive and aerospace industries and enjoy combined sales worth £4.4bn. They employ over 56,000 people and together will become the world's second largest light vehicle brakes manufacturer and second largest producer of diesel injection systems.

The merger is valued at £3.2bn and makes the new company one of the top ten suppliers of automotive parts in the world. It is expected that pre-tax savings, in the second year, of up to £65m will be possible but re-structuring costs estimated at £50m will prevent this advantage in the first year. Sir Brian Pearse has been appointed LucasVarity's non-executive chairman, Victor Rice has become chief executive officer and the group finance director will be John Grant.

Bus performance improves in London

London Transport Buses has announced that operated mileage in the capital has increased from 99.1% to 99.3% in the first three months of 1996. The improvements were achieved despite a resumption of terrorist activity and security alerts, including the explosions in Docklands and Aldwych. Long term roadworks have also contributed to disruption of services, particularly on the North Circular Road and at Harrow and Wealdstone. Losses in mileage through traffic congestion were claimed to have reduced from 1.2% to 0.8%. Excess waiting time on high frequency routes was also improved while the percentage of low frequency buses departing on time improved from 67.5% to 70.5%.

Adam Mills to join London & Continental Railways

Adam Mills, the deputy chief executive of National Express has been seconded to London & Continental Railways, the consortium in which National Express has a 17% share and is to construct the Channel Tunnel rail link. He joins LCR immediately although there is no indication as to whether he is to become its chief executive. Adam Mills had been tipped to replace Ray McEnhill as chief executive at National Express. McEnhill is stepping down for health reasons and Adam Mills' secondment will renew speculation about his successor. LCR now has part ownership of the Eurostar train service and it is expected the main role for Adam Mills will be to develop this.

CPT support for anti-pollution campaign

The Confederation of Passenger Transport has declared its support for the 'Don't Choke Britain' campaign which has been launched by Transport Secretary Sir George Young and Health Minister Baroness Cumberledge. The campaign is now in its third year and comprises a series of initiatives designed to promote the importance of reducing emissions, either by technological means or by using alternative forms of transport.

CPT president, Ron Whittle said: 'I am delighted and very honoured for CPT to be a part of this important and worthwhile campaign. It is vital that people understand the dangers of environmental pollution in this country and react accordingly. We must persuade people to use public transport wherever possible, but this can only be achieved by the Government, local

④ "The lifting and towing of modern coaches and buses in use today requires skilled operators and specialist equipment. The construction of these vehicles dictates that a recovery vehicle that can pick up on the wheels is less likely to cause damage as a result of the lift; getting to the wheels requires an under-reach boom with a very low profile - enabling it to be positioned under the coach and a very long reach so it can reach the axles - particularly at the rear. The Boniface Interstater range of underlifts are designed specifically to meet this criteria - with reaches up to 4450mm and lifting capacity at this reach of 8 tonnes, the equipment can handle the majority of vehicles in use today. Boniface also have the expertise to advise the most suitable chassis onto which this equipment should be mounted - like capacity and reach, the integration between recovery equipment and host chassis is of great importance. Contact Boniface Engineering on 01842 754232."

Leyland Centenary

In the second of his articles marking the centenary of Leyland, Doug Jack looks at the Leyland National which he claims was

Britain's best ever bus

The month when Leyland celebrates its 100th anniversary is an appropriate time to ask what was the best bus ever built in Britain.

At the risk of swamping the Editor with letters from followers of other makes, I came up with a short list of the Leyland PD2/PD3, the Royal Tiger in all its forms, the Leopard and the Olympian, but they were pipped by for my vote by the Leyland National.

Indestructible

Although the 500 series engine is weak, the rest of the vehicle is virtually indestructible. The National was designed for major operators in a highly regulated market. Ironically, it has lasted far longer than planned, serving operators large and small in a market which is deregulated and, in some areas, highly competitive.

I nominate the National for the best ever bus award for two main reasons. The first is the level of thought which went into the project. The second is the manufacturing process, which had to be seen to be believed.

The background

After Leyland and AEC merged in 1962, they and nationalised Bristol dominated the domestic market for single deck buses. Leyland and AEC were also vigorous exporters. The Construction and Use Regulations changed in 1961 to permit single deck buses up to 36ft long. They could seat 53/55 passengers and many were used to replace old double deckers of similar capacity.

Private car ownership was on the rise and operators were constantly trying to contain their costs. There was a major drive towards one man operation, which was strongly resisted by the unions. They gave in on single deckers, but held out on double deckers for several more years.

Leyland and AEC both had rear engined single deckers, with a low frame in the front half of the bus and either a ramp or steps up and over the rear axle and the horizontal engine.

They were not the most successful models, partly because some bodybuilders had not made allowance for the greater flexibility of rear engine chassis. On the other hand, the simple two step entrance meant that passengers could get on and off very quickly and there was much less noise intrusion, compared with a mid underfloor engine.

Transport policy

A Labour Government had come to power in 1964 and was re-elected with a larger majority in 1966. It saw buses as a necessary public service and set about creating a climate to encourage the use of local service buses. Leyland had close contacts with Government and came to the conclusion that the industry was heading for the large scale use of maximum capacity single deckers.

Concept bus

Leyland had a strong engineering base. A small team was gathered under Joe McGowan, Engineering Director, to develop a highly accessible low floor bus. In 1967, they unveiled a full size mock-up. It had twin steering axles and twin axles at the rear, with small wheels and tyres. There was only one step at the front entrance and centre exit onto a full flat floor, 30 years before such a concept started to become popular on British roads!

Leading operators were invited to see the vehicle and many interesting comments were gathered. That was probably the sum total of a marketing exercise as we would understand nowadays.

NBC created

In 1968, the Government acquired the bus operating subsidiaries of BET and merged them with the already nationalised Tilling to form the National Bus Company, starting on 1 January 1969. Leyland had already acquired a shareholding in the nationalised Bristol and ECW companies, giving them an even stronger link into NBC.

The formation of British Leyland in 1968 had also bought Daimler and Guy into Leyland's control and given the company a virtual monopoly of the heavy duty bus sector.

Design team

Joe McGowan's team had been strengthened by some specialists with experience of car design and production. The Board felt confident that there would be demand for 3,000 large single deck buses per annum, in home and export markets.

At these volumes, there

Many individual Nationals have now served long lists of different operators. Among the first to change hands were those Midland Red owned vehicles which were acquired by WMPTE. This one is seen in Coventry soon after with the double N symbols painted out.

was a very strong case for a standard bus which could be built on highly automated tooling, and which would greatly reduce the high number of man hours in traditional bodybuilding.

Marcus Smith

In the summer of 1968, Leyland recruited Marcus Smith. An engineer by discipline, he had worked his way up through the ranks of Tilling companies and had been Director and General Manager of Bristol, before taking an appointment in South Africa with United Transport. He joined Leyland Motors as Deputy General Manager, but that was a "cover" to let him take control of the highly confidential project.

Integral design

The design team opted for an integral model, which became known within the company as FPB7 (Forward Project Bus). In theory, integrals should be lighter than chassis plus bodywork, but such great strength was built into the new bus that no saving was achieved. The first prototypes had been built by 1969 on hand tooling and were used on a series of endurance and other tests.

The 510 engine

Meanwhile, Leyland was developing a new generation of heavy truck engines to replace the 0.680, which was by then over twelve years old. There were recurring problems in the group with cylinder head gaskets, hence the bright suggestion to develop a fixed head engine with an overhead camshaft. There had been significant improvements in components like valves, which were lasting much longer in service.

From top to bottom, the engine was remarkably slim and that made it an attractive bus engine, in horizontal form. Known as the 510, it was fitted in the FPB7 prototypes.

Factory location

The Government was kept fully informed about the new project and played a major role in the location of the factory. The Board had already decided that it wanted a greenfield site, where it would be free to develop its own labour relations and working practices. In 1954, Leyland felt that the small but militant vehicle building union was threatening stability on the major Leyland site, and therefore abruptly ceased body-building activities.

The Government was giving generous financial assistance to locate in economically depressed areas, where traditional industries were dying out. After some strong lobbying, a site was chosen just inland from Workington, on the west Cumbrian coast. Construction of the factory started early in 1970.

Steel selected

Joe McGowan and his team decided to build the new bus in steel, because it was less expensive than aluminium and could be pressed into all sorts of shapes. A ring frame structure was adopted, and this gave the bus tremendous strength. Many parts were supplied by Pressed Steel Fisher which had come into the Corporation with BMC.

The main weakness of

steel was its susceptibility to corrosion. Various protection systems were tested, but eventually the engineers opted for epoxy powder coating which had never before been used in the motor industry on a large scale. The treatment had to adhere to galvanised steel and accept external painting. With the benefit of hindsight, the adoption of epoxy powder coating was one of the most brilliant decisions.

Great innovation

McGowan worked on every aspect of the design. The choice of left and right hand drive were built in from the very start. Goodyear developed a new low profile tyre which was lower in height than conventional tyres, but had the same carrying capacity. That meant less intrusion at the front wheel boxes and more space between then in the gangway.

The driving compartment was completely new. One of the design requirements was for all the controls to be light enough for a female driver to operate a full shift. A new and smaller steering wheel immediately gave more room.

The space to the left of the instrument panel was kept clear for ticket issuing equipment. All the other controls were laid out to come easily to hand, in the order in which they were most likely to be used. Most were on a panel on the driver's right hand side. Even the driver's coat hook was an engineered part.

The heating and ventilation system was also novel. It was mounted in a pod and at the rear of the roof, where the air was reckoned to be cleanest. Twin motors forced the heating down over the windows, removing any condensation, and keeping the bus remarkably warm. The prototypes performed very well, even in Arctic conditions. Sadly, cost accountants removed one of the motors before the vehicle went into volume production, which was unfortunate.

Air suspension was fitted as standard, with the axles mounted on A frames which were ingeniously designed to prevent the bus from diving when braking. This was the first successful volume application of air suspension on any British bus.

The original plan had been to build the bus in 10.0, 11.0 and 12.0 metre overall lengths, but then the UITP recommended a minimum door aperture of 1,200mm. As a result, Leyland redesigned to overall lengths of 10.3 and 11.3 metres, but with a very high degree of commonality.

Company formed

In July 1969 it was

This frontal study of one of Midland red's first Nationals shows the British Leyland roundel which most vehicles have long since lost.

Both dual and single door versions were offered from the start. This is one of a large number taken by London Transport.

announced that the new bus would be built in a joint venture with the National Bus Company and that the new manufacturing subsidiary would be known as the Leyland National Company Ltd. Marcus Smith was appointed Director and General Manager and had to put in many hours of hard work, keeping the two shareholders fully informed during a critical stage in the project.

His task has been underestimated. He had to accommodate some very powerful personalities in the two parents, not the least being Ron Ellis, the Managing Director of Leyland's truck and bus operations, who could think strategically one minute and become immersed in the fine detail the next.

Product launch

The name of the new company was a certain give-away, and all was revealed to the operating industry when one of the pre-production Leyland Nationals was unveiled at the Earls Court Show in the autumn of 1970. It was the talk of the Show, although some of the press criticised certain features, like the seats, which were changed before volume production commenced.

Fantastic factory

My other reason for choosing the National is the quite remarkable factory. Marcus Smith was under constraints about the number of people he could take from other parts of Leyland, although many departments provided services to him. He took John Clarke and Ken Hargreaves, who had worked on the prototypes at Leyland, and four bright young graduates, one of them being David Quainton, now Sales and Marketing Director at Plaxton.

In retrospect, they performed a quite amazing feat. They had to oversee the building of the factory, specify and order the plant and equipment, and continually ensure that any modifications introduced by the design team on the prototypes were passed on to the contractors making the equipment.

Part of the deal, with the Government, to move to Workington involved major improvements to the A66 trunk road from its junction with the newly completed M6 motorway at Penrith to west Cumberland.

There was the inevitable public enquiry where Marcus Smith spoke most convincingly about the need to receive materials promptly, and about the risks of delivering completed buses along narrow roads through many small villages. The A66 was substantially rebuilt after the enquiry, bypassing several towns and villages.

The main factory unit was almost rectangular, over 300 metres long and 108 metres wide. When you measure that against the average 11 metre National, you get an idea of the size. The assembly lines were laid across the plant, in short lines, so that material could be delivered close to the point of use, and any vehicle requiring remedial work could be taken out of line without disrupting the whole

There were even a number of articulated Nationals produced with the assistance of DAB which was then part of Leyland but is now part of Scania.

This lift equipped National was new to East Kent but was photographed in Leicester working for Kinches.

carefully timed process.

The National was designed to be built with semi-skilled labour. A nearby factory was used to train the workforce before the main plant was opened. The recruits had previously worked in some traditional heavy industries, like mining, but they adapted amazingly well to the new technology and made a major contribution to the success of the Workington factory.

The first buses came off the line early in 1972. Marcus Smith and his team completed the plant on time, and on budget.

Powder coating

Except for a very small number of parts made in-house, all material was delivered to the factory, either ready for treatment, or for assembly. All steel parts went through a pre-treatment process, to remove any grease or dirt, before passing into the powder coating plant.

Both the components and the powder were electrically charged, so that electrostatic action held the powder evenly on the component, even on corners and edges. A drying process ensured that the panels were warm, but not too hot to handle.

One of the favourite demonstrations with visitors was to give them a newly coated part and a coin and ask them to destroy the corrosion treatment. However vigorously they tried, they could never break the powder coated surface. Powder coating is one reason why the National has proved to be so durable.

Automation

The underframe, sides, front and rear ends, and roof were made in huge jigs. Panels were attached to the frame, then huge drills automatically made holes for the Aydelok rivets which held the structure together. The drills worked to a very high degree of accuracy. One man fed the rivets from the outside. The other used a pneumatic tool to feed the collar onto the shank and tighten it from the inside. Over 5,000 rivets were used in every National.

Once the main sub assemblies were married up, the bus began to take shape. The work could be completed at each station in under one hour. Therefore, unless there was a hiccup, yellow warning lights flashed and every vehicle moved forward one stage each hour.

The structures were under-sealed, then the complete shells passed into automated paint spray booths, where two coats of paint were applied before the body shell went into drying ovens.

That stage was followed by a number of stations where piping and wiring were added, then much of the interior trim. Engines, gearboxes and axles went in at a very late stage, mainly to keep down the costs of holding expensive stock. At the last two stations, the batteries, fuel, oil and water were added, then each bus was started up and driven across to a test centre for final preparation and delivery.

The rivetted construction was not pleasing on the eye, but it was effective. Accident damaged panels could be removed very quickly and replaced by ready painted spares. The very high level of tooling guaranteed precise replacement.

Sales shortfall

The National never hit its sales targets on the home market, because the trade unions accepted one man double deckers and they accounted for the bulk of orders from the major cities in the 1970's.

It failed to reach its export targets for a very simple reason. Comparatively few countries could make chassis and running units. Many more had domestic bodybuilders. The completely built up National was a severe threat to local industries which were quite often protected by prohibitive customs duties on imported vehicles.

The largest single order came from Venezuela, for 450. At that time, the south American country was flush with oil revenues and wanted to modernise public transport in the capital, Caracas. They needed 450 buses, and quickly. Only Leyland and Ikarus could respond quickly enough.

That was one of the benefits of the National plant. It wound up production very rapidly and turned out ninety per month over a five month period. Production got up to 32-33 per week, the highest the plant ever achieved. The very high level of automation coped easily with the increased volumes and the contract was very profitable.

Other export markets were Australia, Jamaica, Trinidad, Norway, France and the Netherlands, with prototypes built for several countries, including Russia.

Although it was a very standardised bus there were a number of options. Single and dual door versions of both the 10.3m and 11.3m variants were offered and there were also dual door buses with an additional door on the offside for airport work, the latter a less radical alternative to the half cabbed Nationals with ramped front entrances which were converted by Sparshatts for the same duties. Other possibilities explored in the hope of utilising more of the plant's enormous capacity were the Lifeline mobile rescue unit, executive conference centres, mobile banks and prison transport vehicles. A National underframe, the B21 was produced and examples sold with Alexander Belfast bodywork to Ulsterbus/Citybus and Ipswich and with Jonckheere bodywork in Belgium.

Engine changes

In retrospect, Leyland persevered far too long with the troublesome 510 engine. Two or three operators had experimented with other power units, but it was not until 1979 that Leyland launched the National 2, with the much more popular and reliable 0.680 engine. The Gardner 6HLXB was added very quietly to the option list a few months later.

Tory blow

The Conservatives followed Labour in 1979 and announced plans to progressively reduce Bus Grant over a five year period, starting in 1980. Most operators had comparatively young fleets. Some had bought Nationals for quick delivery when double deck programmes were still quite slow.

The full size single deck parc was very modern, therefore orders fell away sharply, and production limped along for five years. The very last National was delivered in 1985 to Halton Borough Council, a loyal National customer.

And then came deregulation and with it a demand for used service buses, especially reliable ones, which saw Nationals painted in every hue offering services which often competed with those of their previous owners. Their popularity has continued with, it is estimated, as many as 70% of all the Nationals built for the UK still operating 24 years after their introduction.

After the National

The Workington plant, built to make one highly standardised product, had to diversify into a much wider variety, including the Titan double decker, railcars, the Royal Tiger Doyen coach, Olympian bodywork, the Lynx (which replaced the National), and various other ventures. It is to the very great credit of the management and workforce that they took on these tasks, and learned new skills.

Even so, in the annals of bus history, Workington will always be known as the home of the National - Britain's best ever bus!

The very last National built was delivered to Halton Borough Council, an enthusiastic user of the type and its successor, the Leyland Lynx.

Operator Focus

Eastbourne Buses

Getting along nicely

Eastbourne Buses is one of the diminishing number of operators which are municipally owned. It was formed in 1903 and unlike many of its counterparts never ran trams or trolley buses but has always relied on the motor bus. Although the Government's drive to steer all such bodies into private hands has seen the number of municipals dwindle, Eastbourne has no plans to succumb to its wishes. The Council views its bus operation very much as an asset to the local community and there are no plans for a sale to outside bodies or to allow a management/employee buyout. Eastbourne became a limited company in 1986.

David Howard has been managing director of the operation since 1988 and alongside a programme of rationalising the network and putting some of the work out to County Council tender, has instilled an element of diversification into Eastbourne's business programme. He claims that deregulation has been beneficial in many ways because it has allowed the removal of operational barriers although with this has come the inevitable competition. Not that this has been all bad. Despite the arrival of Stagecoach on his doorstep he has managed to turn their presence into an asset by making Eastbourne more operationally efficient and by providing the competition with MOT, recovery and vehicle respray facilities on a commercial basis.

David said, 'Eastbourne was suffering restriction up until 1986. It had been running services within the community which were protected but the advent of competition meant that revenues were falling. It was very constricting for us prior to deregulation because we are in an area with many local places of interest, such as Beachy Head and Battle, but we were unable to run services to these places and that is where a great many of the town's visitors wanted to go to. Once the barriers were removed it was possible to put on developing services and provide the necessary links. The town services were then rationalised along two main corridors served by interworkings that were arranged to provide a five minute frequency.'

The current favourite in the Eastbourne fleet is the Ikarus DAF SB220 Citybus. Its rugged construction and reliability has impressed the company.

Eastbourne Buses also held a 49% share in TopLine

Buses which operated in Hastings. This was jointly owned by Southdown and when that company was acquired by Stagecoach, Eastbourne found it was effectively operating buses against itself! Needless to say the shares were disposed of quite quickly.

'Eastbourne gets a massive influx of visitors and students in the summer months, more than doubling the population to around 160,000, and they seldom have their own transport. As a large number are foreign English language students it is important to provide them with easy to understand timetable and route information as well as having a reliable service. We looked very hard at ways to make this easy and have adopted a colour coded route system. Diagrams have been produced showing where each route runs and the stops are all equipped with the corresponding flags for ease of recognition.'

Eastbourne's Birch Road base is on a modern industrial estate fronted by an office block, car park and reception area for MOT tests. The yard and workshops are surrounded by security fencing which offers protection for the premises and up to 45 visiting coaches which can take advantage of safe storage whilst in the area. The workshops are comprehensively equipped with Ministry standard pits, testing equipment, a modern spray booth and oven which can cope with articulated trucks, stores area and a class five MOT testing bay.

Fuel is available for resale to visiting operators and there is a new rollover brushwash which is also commercially available. David said, 'When I came here about 90% of our business was operating vehicles but a programme of diversification has seen this figure reduce to around 65%. The Ministry use our pits for annual inspections and we also maintain about 90 Government vehicles as well as providing contract maintenance to some local operators. The Government contract meant we had to introduce security measures so this made the yard ideal to park up visiting coaches. About six Shearings vehicles are based here permanently - those with drivers living in or around Eastbourne, and many others come on weekly tours so a safe stopover is very attractive to them. We have been able to offer these operators the use of our services and often do running repairs or supply spare parts in addition to fuelling and washing the coaches. A number are now account customers and book to come here regularly.'

'To make things easier for visiting drivers we issue them with a free bus pass for the duration of their stay. They can catch a bus right outside the depot which will take them into town and these are quite frequent. It may seem odd, the number of buses actually coming down Birch Road into the industrial estate, but we find it is very beneficial to effect crew changes. They can park up in the yard, report for duty and then hop on the bus outside the gate. They can catch a bus back here when their shift ends and it means we have no hassle with running changeover crews backwards and forwards.'

Eastbourne invested in a new spray booth and oven to offer a complete package of services to outside customers as well as seeing to its own requirements. The large oven can be partitioned off for economical operation when spraying smaller vehicles and it utilises the latest low pressure spraying equipment and complies with all the new Health and Safety regulations. It is also a certified ICI Auto-colour centre and this has brought in a great deal of outside work from the haulage sector in addition to resprays for 250 London buses and over 80 British Telecom vehicles.

MOT testing for vehicles up to class five is catered for from Monday to Friday and is done strictly on a test only basis. Exhaust gas analysers were acquired to meet with requirements and two bays are dedicated to vehicle testing in their own self contained workshop unit. 'We don't do any pre-test work or put parts on for the customers,' explained David, 'They prefer it that way because they get an honest test. We are not looking to make anything out of preparation or by selling parts because we have the vehicle on the ramps. The customers obviously feel they are getting a good deal because they keep coming back - so we cannot be far wrong!'

The staff at Eastbourne are all encouraged to hold PSV

Eastbourne's coach fleet shares the same strong corporate identity as the buses. The vehicles, all straight 53 seaters, are kept in immaculate condition and driven by a regular group of staff.

licences and help out with the driving whenever the need arises. Seasonal pressure is the main reason for this as there are special needs for providing late duplicates in high season when so many people are in the town. Apart from this, the company has a target of achieving 100% operational mileage and succeeds at this task very well. David said, 'We have to get the vehicles out there and run, come what may, and it is only a physical problem like a puncture or mechanical breakdown that ever prevents this. Even if it means sending a secretary or myself to cover.'

'I actually spend a fair bit of my time driving the buses because it helps me to keep in touch with what the drivers are facing. You can soon find out if bus stops are in the right place or if the public are unhappy with some aspect of the operation. I don't let on who I am to anyone complaining, but I tell them that the man's name is on the side of the bus, along with the address, and they should write to him to express their opinions. It is quite surprising how many actually take the trouble to follow this up and it avoids any conflict during the journey.'

'We sometimes get contracts for rail replacement services and I will often drive on these at weekends. I don't get paid any additional money for this so it means we can be more competitive with our tenders. Putting other staff on these duties gives them a chance to see what happens out on the road and perhaps broadens their horizons a little. Anyway it is valuable experience and the chance for regular drivers to get a break. The rail privatisation has made this work a little more attractive to us but has highlighted a ridiculous wastage because these new companies refuse to integrate properly. We have South Eastern Trains and Network Southeast passengers arriving at the same time but they are not allowed to get on the same bus. They demand that we use double deckers and so it is not unusual that we have two deckers leaving the station within ten seconds of each other, both with perhaps ten passengers each, heading for the same destination.'

Although Eastbourne operates about ten double deckers David would prefer to see them gone from the fleet. He said, 'We only operate double deckers because the schools contracts insist on vehicles with a minimum capacity of 74. It causes us a lot of problems because the local secondary modern schools were built out in the sticks and we suffer terribly from tree damage to the vehicles. I get rather cross about this because the Council, who own us, refuse to cut them back! We had an incident just the other week where one of our buses had a branch go through the upper front screen and out of the roof. Luckily no-one was seriously hurt but we are having to sue the Council to get the cost of the repairs covered.'

'Double decker capacity in town is not really required very often and we can cope quite adequately with full sized single deckers. We bought five Dennis Darts to see if the midibus phenomena would work for us but it doesn't really. I won't be having any more. It's not because there is anything wrong with them but they don't have the capacity when we need it, in the summer.'

David has pursued a policy of providing vehicles big enough to cope with demand rather than try to operate minibuses at increased frequencies. Apart from requiring additional or seasonal staff to maintain such an operation, he is very much of the opinion that 'bread vans are for bakers!' As such the fleet consists of heavyweight buses and coaches apart from the recent addition of a Toyota Optimo to cater more efficiently for small party private hires which have spiralled.

A trio of Wadham Stringer Vanguard II bodied Dennis Lances were introduced but failed to impress against their Javelin stablemates.

Operator Focus

David believes much of this is because of the corporate strength that has been developed. The coaches were previously distinguished by the Eastbourne Coaches name but now bear the corporate blue with Eastbourne Buses boldly emblazoned on a silver background. The public are used to the name and know that they are dealing with the same reliable company that caters for their public transport needs in the town and on the many daily excursions that it operates.

Five coaches form the basis of the private hire fleet and these are kept in immaculate condition. Eastbourne does not organise tours or holidays unless they form part of the private hire arrangement and then they may tour the country or go abroad. They do not carry a great number of refinements but, apart from the Optimo, are straight 53 seaters without toilets or coffee machines. This provides plenty of passenger space and comfort for the generally short distance excursions which are operated. The coaches are driven by a group of eight staff who are inclined towards the operation. They have become well known to many of the regular travellers and are booked frequently on a personal basis rather than by a specific vehicle.

A new Ikarus 350 DAF SB3000WS is scheduled to join the fleet shortly and will feature an automatic gearbox. David maintains that the current policy of having all staff holding PSV licences and the type of tests they are training them to take dictates that all the fleet will eventually be equipped with automatic transmissions.

Ikarus is also the preferred vehicle now for bus operation and more DAF SB220 based citybuses will eventually replace Wadham Stringer bodied Dennis Lance and Javelin based buses which form the mainstay of the fleet. The Javelins, despite their high floor and relative passenger unfriendliness for bus work (by today's standards) are still very highly rated and have proved to be extremely reliable and cost effective vehicles to operate. The Ikarus DAF combination has been very successful too and Eastbourne has even sought second-hand sources of supply to increase their number to eight. The fleet now contains 23 full sized single deckers, the oldest of which are H registered.

David is very enthusiastic about the Ikarus marque, claiming that they are the strongest vehicles he has encountered and seldom require any attention. He is also very pleased with the double decker DAF DB250 which joined the fleet last year. He said, 'I was very sceptical about the smaller 8.6 litre turbocharged engine's ability to cope but it performs admirably. We have even operated it round the clock for 24 hours at a time on a number of occasions and I have to say that it takes anything you can throw at it. It is very possible we will look at introducing more soon as I have ten Olympians which are coming up for replacement.'

While Eastbourne may look to be a very modern operation it allows itself a degree of nostalgia by continuing to run a few older vehicles. A 1967 Leyland PD3 and a 1968 open topped Atlantean are still fielded for certain tasks but lurking in its own special shed, tucked away behind the bus wash, is a 1950 AEC Regal which goes to rallies and is used for wedding hire and other special occasions. The bus was originally new to Eastbourne and passed to a collector after it had served its time. The collector, some years later, contacted the company and offered it back. The company agreed to buy it if the staff would be prepared to finish its renovation and so the deal was done.

A key aspect for the success of Eastbourne buses has been the ability to get on, not only with each other, but with the competition as well. David said, 'We are very integrated as an organisation and with a small operation like ours, just 130 people, you very quickly get to know one another. My door is always propped open so that I am accessible to staff and they will usually have a quick word if they are passing. It is sometimes just a quick Everything OK 'Guv'nor' but sometimes its very useful information about a damaged bus stop or other items that can be attended to more quickly if I am aware.'

'By paying good rates and treating the employees well we have a very low staff turnover. I think that says something on its own. There is a waiting list to become a driver for Eastbourne Buses which is a healthy situation I would like to maintain.'

In addition to providing workshop facilities and other practical services to competitors, Eastbourne has also established a thriving travel shop in the town. David said, 'We used to sell our own excursion or rover tickets from a wooden kiosk, more of a shack really, and it barely kept one person fully occupied. When competition arrived we felt that the facility should be upgraded, not just to suit our own needs but to attract competitors into using us as an agency. We proved that with some support from other operators it could be a money spinner. Now we have a modern shop based in the Arndale shopping centre which is a full time occupation for three people. We invested in computerised booking systems and took on the agencies for supplying Stagecoach tickets, National Express tickets and for tour operations. If we are going to have competition in the area I reckon we should be able to take some money off them wherever possible!'

Eastbourne is one of those companies that appears to be doing things against popular trends and yet getting away with it nicely. The age profile of its fleet is something to be envied although many have been sceptical over the choice of vehicles. Introducing Javelin based buses into a town like Eastbourne, where there is a proliferation of elderly and infirm residents, would seem to be not just politically incorrect, but downright anti-social. The move has proved very beneficial though, and the Javelins have been both economic and reliable.

The trend towards the Ikarus/DAF SB220 has been a little more 'passenger friendly' and the company's enthusiasm for the Hungarian built citybus is very evident throughout each department. Better accessibility for the local residents is gradually being considered but at present the company maintains a successful operation with few, if any, complaints about the lack of lowfloor bus availability. A sudden change in the type of vehicles operated by Stagecoach could dictate a change but Eastbourne is in a position to respond quickly if the need arises.

Centenary Rally

Leyland 100 Celebrations

The centenary of the founding of Leyland was celebrated on Sunday 2 June with a rally of preserved and active Leyland vehicles in the streets of the Lancashire town from which the company took its name. Buses, coaches, fire engines, trucks and military vehicles were to be found lining the roads and there were more in large parking areas adjacent to the British Commercial Vehicle Museum which is housed in the former Leyland delivery building. The Museum itself was open and provided visitors with a historical overview of the whole British industry of which Leyland is an important part.

Car parking was plentiful and those who wished could take advantage of a shuttle service using Leyland buses including a pair of the rare AN69 Atlanteans which are still operated by the local Fishwicks concern, a former Exeter Corporation Tiger TS8 dating from 1938 and a Massey bodied Titan PD2/37 new to Caerphilly in 1966.

Driven from Maidstone to Leyland to participate was this 1937 Tiger TS7 with 8.6 litre engine and Harrington 32 seat coachwork. It made return journey without missing a beat.

The star of the event was this newly restored Leyland X2 which first took to the road in 1908 and is believed to be both the oldest surviving Leyland and the oldest British built bus in existence. It was restored by its owner, Mike Sutcliffe.

The Leyland company has undergone major upheavals since the somewhat grander event which celebrated Leyland's 90th anniversary. Trucks bearing the Leyland name continue to be built in the town but sadly not buses, the only remaining Leyland designed product still offered in the UK being the Olympian which Volvo builds at its Irvine plant.

Though Leyland is not the force in the market it was the marque remains greatly respected by operators of all kinds of commercial vehicles, a fact underlined by the many who devote vast amounts of time, effort and money to restoring and exhibiting old Leylands. Nobody goes to greater lengths than Mike Sutcliffe of Dunstable who has a
